Scaling Up: Recovering Costs to Enable Mission-Driven Library Publishing

Rebecca Welzenbach & Jason Colman
University of Michigan Library
Two truths (and a lie?)

Truth: We have reached the limits of our university base funding. If we want to grow, we need to find funds elsewhere.

Truth: there is money available, frequently in departments and units on our own campus. And amazingly, folks want to give it to us. But we need an appropriate way to ask for it and receive it.

Lie: That seems easy enough!
Plan

1. What should we do? (What have we tried already?)
2. How do we do it?
3. What do we have yet to do?
4. ....What should you do?

Goals:

- Generate resources beyond our limited library funding;
- Subsidize OA projects with revenue-generating projects;
- Incentivize folks (especially but not only at U-M) to try open access by giving them a platform and support staff.
Goal:

Create a sense of value for our work and commitment on the part of our publishing partners

Some development may be needed--relevant to all publications, not unique to this one. Will work with PTG to plan this going forward.

This estimates only the initial set up and launch cost for Michigan Publishing staff. Does not include other resources or indirect costs (eg. servers, lights), or staff time in other units (e.g. $849.00 Core Services)
What hasn’t worked well (for us)

● Subsidizing OA with revenue generating products
● A tier-based fee structure
● Charging external partners a significantly higher rate while waiving fees for UM-based partners
● Subventions
New goals: What do we want to do?

- Scale up sustainably
- Advertise services and recruit new offerings clearly and proactively
- Steward university resources well
- Ask our campus partners to invest/share the risk of taking on a publishing project
1. Find out how much it costs to do your work
2. Ask for that much money
So, how to get started?
Working with the Bureaucracy

• Be ready for invoicing to take extra time and effort

• Take advantage of programs like external Accounts Receivable
Recharge Rates

- A way of billing direct costs (e.g. salary) in your unit to other units, internal or external
- Required by Federal regulations for public institutions
- Might be called something else, like a “rebill”
What a Recharge Rate Looks Like (Fixed Menu)

Recharge Activity: XML Conversion
Performed by: Digital Publishing Technician
Salary: $35,000/year
Unit of activity: Article
Time spent per article: ½ hour
Times activity performed per year: 500 (250 hours)
% of FTE devoted to recharge: 12.5%
Recharge rate per article: $8.75 (internal) $11.38 (ext.)
What a Recharge Rate Looks Like (Hourly rates)

Recharge Activity: XML Conversion
Performed by: Digital Publishing Technician
Salary: $35,000/year
Unit of activity: hour
Hourly Rate: $17.50 (internal) $22.75 (external)
Hours activity performed per year: 250 hours
% of FTE devoted to recharge: 12.5%
Recharge Rates and your Budget

• Allocate portions of salaries to recharge account

• Attempt to estimate correctly

• If you’re off by more than ~3%, rebalance account at the end of each Fiscal Year (transfer funds in/out)
Setting up a Recharge sounds like a lot of work, and it is.

But there are intangibles, too.

Author Compensation

Traditional Royalties on Sales are problematic for OA + Print on Demand projects.

Instead, Michigan Publishing Services offers authors a percentage of Net Publisher Compensation (what we receive after printing/distribution/fees are taken out.)
Current Year Goals

Via Recharge, recover:

25% of our student and 100% of our vendor costs

30% of the Digital Publishing Coordinator

10% of the Director of Publishing Services

10% of the Print Services Manager

5% of the Front-end Web Designer

5% of an Accountant
