DEDICATION

Outskirts is dedicated to my wife, Jodi, the bridge between all of my worlds.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, thank you to my amazing wife, Jodi, without whose love, understanding, and artistry I could have never made it to this point. Thanks to my stepson, Leo, for reminding me that all real artists take time to play. Thanks to Evan Chambers for his guidance through this process, and thanks to Michael Daugherty, Kristin Kuster, Carter Pann, Richard Toensing, Daniel Kellogg, and Robert Hutchinson for every lesson along the way. I would never have written this piece without the help of Ellen Rowe, Bill Lucas, Brad Goode, and Jay Scott in discovering my voice as a trumpeter and jazz musician. Thanks to my parents and my siblings, who gave me my first chances to play music and never stopped encouraging me. And a special thanks to Michael Brecker, Victor Jara, Maria Schneider, Samuel Barber, and the thousand others whose music and lives have inspired me to keep writing.

PREFACE

I have lived my musical life on the outskirts of two worlds.

My formative musical experiences were always a combination of jazz and classical music: I would play in band and orchestra, sing in choir, before going home to play along with recordings of Miles Davis and Wynton Marsalis. My compositional voice is tethered more closely to my voice as an improviser than it is to the giants of the Euro-classical tradition, but I have never been able to find a real creative voice in the short forms and stylistic limiters of traditional jazz composition. Similarly, while I call myself a jazz trumpeter, my approach to improvisation is guided by the development, forms, and textures of my favorite concert music before it is guided by bop conventions. I am a jazz musician and a classical composer, two identities inextricably bound to one another. My musical personality resides between the realms of jazz and classical music, in a world that is deeply indebted to both but is only at home in between.

Outskirts is a project which works to fuse these two identities organically and soulfully into one artistic statement. It begins from the belief that the storied attempts of 1960's-era composers to blend jazz musicians into the orchestra failed not because the two cannot blend, but because the ingredients were wrong. Jazz-classical hybrid pieces too often attempt to mix superficial styles: the strings “swing” or play a “walking bass;” the orchestra plays angular, atonal gestures underneath a blues progression or some other jazz cliché. Outskirts reflects my belief that the identity of jazz arises not from its colloquialisms, but from the way jazz musicians improvise. Jazz improvisation is music of interaction, reaction, and spontaneous changes in direction and approach. This philosophy is the soul of jazz, and in Outskirts I worked to blend it with the soul of concert music: intricate, complex structures of form, texture and color which are only possible to build through notation.

The two movements of Outskirts break free of conventions of form and style. The jazz quintet is an organic part of the orchestra, and improvisation is in constant dialogue with written music. Improvisation occurs in short bursts and extended statements, developing continuously with the textures of the orchestra. The written music of the ensemble lends the improvisers textural and motivic material, guiding their creativity as would the choices of another jazz musician. This piece could not exist without a talented orchestra of interpretive musicians, nor could it exist without the five individual creative voices of the jazz quintet. It is a piece, then, which lives on the outskirts of the two traditions, built on a foundation which borrows soil from both.
