Lessons Learned

I had a wonderful global experience. Not to say there weren’t challenges, times where I felt alone or worried about my surroundings. However, the greatest lesson I learned was to be open and present. Going in between the ending of the summer semester and the beginning of the fall semester I found it hard to just enjoy the now. I also stayed rather busy with three different projects, daily Spanish classes for 3 hours and family activities with my host family. As mentioned before I learned to just breathe and focus on the moment, the current experience and let it enrich my life and well-being.

View was created on the belief that one person can make a difference in the lives of others.

Advice

To the best of your ability learn the language of the place you will be visiting

Find multiple sources of funding as deadlines come and go quickly

Research the political climate and social justice issues occurring at your destination right before going.

Acknowledgments

I would like to acknowledge and thank the Office of Global Activities for financially supporting my first of many global experiences.

I would also like to acknowledge my supervisor, Dr. Brad Zebrack for all of his guidance and assistance throughout this experience.

Last but not least I want to acknowledge all of the individuals who made my experience an unforgettable one in Ecuador including the employees at the agency, my host family and housemates and all of the individuals I had the honor of interacting with along the journey.

Skills Utilized and Developed

Engagement

In each of my volunteer projects I was involved in some form of engagement with different populations of the community. With equine therapy I worked heavily with individuals with disabilities both physically. I often got children who did not verbally communicate so I would find other ways to engage such as smiling, talking and being more interactive through sounds as they rode the horse all the while paying attention to their nonverbal responses.

Human Behavior and the Social Environment

In both the Equine therapy project and working with the Elderly I learned to pay attention to how people interacted with others and their environment. An example, in the elderly day center individuals coming from all over the country by bus, foot and car to have social interaction with their peers. They often participated in art therapy more specifically coloring books. It was a highlight of their morning and was a time where they could both focus their attention but could also engage with the others at their table. It was soothing activity of which they would make as individual as they made it social.
