THE DETROIT AREA STUDY OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

Organizational Structure

The Detroit Area Study (DAS) is a continuing facility for graduate training and faculty research, which was established in 1951 at The University of Michigan. The initial support for the Study came from behavioral research funds given to The University of Michigan by the Ford Foundation. Since 1958 The University has assumed complete financial responsibility for the DAS.

The Detroit Area Study is a basic unit in the graduate training program of The University of Michigan's Department of Sociology. In addition, an administrative relationship with the Survey Research Center of the Institute for Social Research provides the DAS with professional aid in all phases of survey research.

The Objectives of the Detroit Area Study

The three main objectives of the Detroit Area Study are: (1) to train students in the methods of field research in the social sciences, (2) to serve as a major resource for basic research in the social sciences at The University of Michigan, and (3) to make social science data available to greater Detroit and to other communities with similar interests and problems.

Student Training

Student participation in the Detroit Area Study requires enrollment for two semesters in a field methods course of all first-year graduates in sociology at The University of Michigan. The enrollment of interested graduate students in psychology, political science, economics, and other related disciplines is encouraged and adds greatly to the interdisciplinary approach which DAS training tries to promote. A listing of students who have participated in the Detroit Area Study through 1959-60 may be found on pages 22-24 of this pamphlet.

The basic training philosophy of the Detroit Area Study is that students will learn best if their experience goes beyond classroom discussion to meet the rigorous conditions involved in completing a major field study while observing high standards of professional competence. The value of this position seems to have been demonstrated by nine years of experience with the DAS. No textbook, however excellent, can convey the frustrations and the successes of social research as well as actual participation in a major research undertaking.

Faculty Research

In addition to the training function, the Detroit Area Study affords an important resource for basic social science research. To a large extent, the training and research objectives of the Detroit Area Study are complementary. The value of the training to the student is considerably increased by the knowledge that his efforts are instrumental in the production of a major piece of research. On the other hand, the worth of the final research product is highly dependent on the quality of the training.

The specific problem which the DAS investigates each year is selected by the DAS Executive Committee. This committee makes its selection after reviewing research proposals submitted by interested faculty members. The faculty participant then works with the students and the DAS staff throughout the research period. Faculty members who have employed Detroit Area Study data in the furtherance of their research interests are listed on the inside front and inside back covers of this pamphlet.

The sample design employed by the Detroit Area Study has always followed a probability model and has usually required the collection of about 750 interviews. The sample universe for most studies has consisted of all adults in the metropolitan Detroit community, but occasionally a particular problem has called for a different type of sample. For example, recently the DAS interviewed precinct workers of both major political parties in a series of Wayne County (Detroit) precincts selected on a probability basis.

Community Services

The third major objective of the Detroit Area Study is to supply social science data of value to greater Detroit and other communities. To this end, almost all DAS reprints and special reports are available without charge.

Certain demographic and socioeconomic data are collected each year by the Detroit Area Study. These materials serve as the basis for a continuing series of reports and articles written by DAS staff members. The publications have a comparatively wide circulation among agencies in Detroit and throughout the country.

Special tabulations of DAS data have been prepared at the request of such agencies as the Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission, the three major Detroit newspapers, the Detroit Council of Churches, The American Jewish Committee, the Catholic Archdiocese of Detroit, the Citizens Research Council of Michigan, the Detroit Public Library, and the City of Detroit's Commission on Community Relations.
