NOTE ON OBTAINING DETROIT AREA STUDY MATERIAL

The Detroit Area Study maintains a complete set of publications resulting from past DAS research, as well as unpublished reports and archives of data, code books and other material relating to past projects. Visitors to the DAS office in Ann Arbor may use most of this material freely.

For those outside of Ann Arbor or in need of personal copies, the following information is provided:

1. Books based on DAS data should be obtained from bookstores or publishers.
2. Reprints of published articles can ordinarily be obtained directly from authors. Where necessary the DAS office will reproduce an article at cost.
3. Copies of unpublished reports listed on pp. 19-26 can be obtained by writing directly to DAS, giving the reference number shown to the left of the listing. Brief reports may be furnished free of charge; longer reports will be copied and mailed at cost.
4. Doctoral dissertations. See note on p. 14.
5. DAS data. Copies of tapes containing many of the early DAS studies can be made available at cost to interested scholars in other universities. Most of the studies are also available through the Inter-University Consortium for Political Research, Institute for Social Research, University of Michigan, and it is preferable for interested persons to write directly to the Consortium where possible.

NOTE: For five years after a study is completed, use of the original data requires the approval of the faculty investigator(s) for that study.

6. Index. This edition of the DAS Bibliography includes an index (pp. 42-44) linking each DAS data set to subsequent published and unpublished material based on it.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

Organizational Structure

The Detroit Area Study (DAS), a continuing facility for graduate training and faculty research, was established in 1951 at The University of Michigan. Initial support came from behavioral research funds given to the University by the Ford Foundation. Since 1958 the University has assumed primary financial responsibility for the DAS, with supplemental funding obtained frequently from outside grants.

The Detroit Area Study is a basic part of the graduate training program of The University of Michigan's Department of Sociology. In addition, an administrative relationship with the Survey Research Center of the Institute for Social Research provides DAS with professional aid in all phases of survey research.

Objectives of the Detroit Area Study

The three main objectives of the Detroit Area Study are: (1) to train students in the methods of survey and related types of field research in the social sciences, (2) to serve as a major resource for basic research by the social sciences at The University of Michigan, and (3) to make social science data available to Greater Detroit and to other communities with similar interests and problems.

Student participation in the Detroit Area Study requires enrollment for two semesters in a field methods practicum in sociology at The University of Michigan. The enrollment of interested graduate students in psychology, political science, economics, social work, and other related disciplines is also encouraged and adds to the interdisciplinary approach which DAS tries to promote. A listing of students who have participated in the Detroit Area Study through 1976 may be found on pages 29-41 of this pamphlet.

The underlying assumption of the Detroit Area Study as a practicum is that students will learn best if their experience goes beyond classroom lectures and discussion to meet rigorous conditions involved in completing a substantive field study while observing high standards of professional competence. No textbook, however excellent, can convey the problems, frustrations, and successes of social research as well as actual participation in a serious research undertaking. Thus students are offered an opportunity to contribute to the design of the research; they play a major part in carrying it out, taking under supervision and in natural sequence the roles of question writer, pretest analyst, field sampler, interviewer, and data processor; finally, each student writes an analysis paper based on a part of the collected data.

In addition to the training function, the Detroit Area Study affords an important resource for social science research at The University of Michigan. To a large extent, the training and research objectives of the Detroit Area Study are complementary. The value of the training to the student is considerably increased by the knowledge that his or her efforts are instrumental in the production of a major piece of research. On the other hand, the worth of the final research product is highly dependent on the quality of the student training and participation.

The specific problem which DAS investigates each year is selected by the DAS Executive Committee, consisting of faculty members from Sociology and several other departments of the University. This committee makes its selection after reviewing research proposals submitted by interested faculty members. The faculty participant then works with the students and the DAS director and staff throughout the research period. Faculty members who have employed Detroit Area Study data in furtherance of their research interests are listed on the inside front and back covers of this pamphlet.

A third objective of the Detroit Area Study is to supply social science data of value to Greater Detroit and other communities. Certain demographic and socioeconomic data are collected each year, and these materials serve as the basis for occasional reports, useful to community agencies and to other research efforts in the Detroit area. Moreover, the regular annual nature of the survey means that key questions can be repeated in order to assess changes in the metropolitan population and its attitudes and reported behaviors.
