

Copyright Keith Green

All Rights Reserved

To My Wife,
I Share This With
You

Acknowledgements

About a year and a half ago, I began to toy with the idea that it would be ok to walk away from this project. That it was too big for me, that I could not complete it. And although I continued to work, it was as one who was beating against air or cursing the night. At that time, the Lord arranged it so that a number of good people stepped in, and so that I could see all of the people who were already there. And so, I thank God first, but I thank Him most of all for all of you.

From my Morehouse days, they are countless teachers, advisors, and friends. To name only a few, Dr. Delores Stevens, Dr. Robert Taylor, Dr. Carole Raybourne, Dr. Melvin Rahming, but most of all Dr. Steven Baker. I told you my dream, and you believed it too. Wherever you are, I am there with you; because wherever I am, you are with me. To Mike, Owen, Sam, and Shea, you made the struggle bearable, and worthwhile. I cannot hope to find better friends.

The UNCF/Mellon Foundation has been exceedingly good to me. For the summer institute, guidance, and continued support, I am eternally grateful. To Dr. Rudolph P. Byrd, thank you for the vision. To my fellow Spice House residents, especially Andrea and Jaisha, I will always remember you. The SSRC-Mellon Mays Foundation continues to do incredible work. To Cally Waite and Emma Tatti, you stepped in right on time. To the dissertation workshop writers, I hope to see you on the other side. At the IRT, Kelly Wise and a host of remarkable professors and grad students continue to do invaluable and outstanding work. I would not have applied to Michigan if it were not for them.

In the course of work allegedly unrelated to my dissertation – teaching – I encountered communities vital to its production. To my adopted department at Rowan, thank you all. Cathy Parrish, I can always count on you for a helping hand and a cheerful smile. To Tanya Clark, thank you for a word in November. Cindy Vitto, you are my good Samaritan. At Camden County College, I have had the good fortune of meeting Debbie Raikes and Anthony Spatola, among many others.

The Paul Robeson Library, where much of this project was written, has been my second home. If I had a dollar for each hour I spent there, it would still not be enough to repay its incredible staff. But I would also like to thank Camden’s Free Public Library, Rowan’s Keith and Shirley Campbell Library, Stockton’s Undergraduate Library, the University of Pennsylvania’s Van Pelt Library, and of course, the University of Michigan’s Hatcher Graduate Library, a place unrivaled in its human and material resources.

The Horace Rackham Graduate School deserves special thanks. I have benefited from a RMF, RHR, and as recently as this spring a One-Term Dissertation Grant. This project would have been inconceivable without such financial support. I cannot say enough good things about the entire BEST institute, its participants, and especially Mary Clark. More recently, the CEW has been incredibly helpful. Thank you, Valerie, for listening and caring.

To my graduate school cohort, you inspire me. Anna, Clare, Dan, Ezequiel, Jeff, Joy, Holly, Pavitra, and Sherry, I hope to see you all again soon. To Paul, thank you for a place to rest my head and good conversations. To Kelly, thank you for a walk and renewed faith in new directions. To Meilee, you are my constant friend; you are Michigan for me.

The entire staff and faculty of the English Department at Michigan deserve their names reprinted here. As soon as I think of one name, however, another comes to mind. So I will say Jan Burgess, who holds the whole thing together.

But, finally, to reach the peak is impossible without a guide (or several). Megan, Tiya, and Xiomara, you see my work in ways that I do not see; thank you for your patience. It is clear that you are all brilliant, but where do you list compassion on a CV? To Sid, with every word I wrote, I thought of you. And, so many times, when I could not think of the right word, I would think to myself, “What would Sid write?” I still do not know. Something incredible, of course. But you have been my reader, and it has been an honor to be your writer. Thank you for believing.

So many family members have knowingly and unknowingly shaped and supported this project. I will name only a few. To Mum, I have no fear of silence or sacrifice because of you; you are a warrior. To Auntie, summers and the Brooklyn Public Library – a recipe for success. To Dave, you show me how to get back up. To Makissa, you are the sister I always wanted. To Grandmummy, you and I both know that you were the first doctor in the family. To Mr. and Mrs. Allen, the names I call you by believe how much you mean to me. To my church family at St. Matthews, I know you have been praying for me; and it has made all the difference.

To my kids – Joshua, Rebekah, and Zion – you provide necessary distraction and perspective. The love you give me is the definition of love. I see God in each of you.

Lastly, to my wife, Kale. You have borne this project as long as I have, and carried it in ways that I could not. We often joke that you wish I could have carried our children, even just for a part of the time. Well, this has been my child, but you have helped to bear this one as well. And that is why I dedicate this to you. Iwalu.

Table of Contents

Dedication.....	ii
Acknowledgements.....	iii
Chapter I:
Introduction.....	1
Chapter II:
Re-membering “natives” in The Narrative of the Life of Mrs. Mary Jemison (1824).....	45
Chapter III:
Authorizing Civility and Citizenship in The Life and Adventures of Henry Bibb (1849).	82
Chapter IV:
Authorizing Epistolary Motherhood in Incidents in the Life of a Slave Girl (1861).....	115
Chapter V:
Authorizing Whiteness in The Narrative of Robert Adams, a Sailor (1816).....	144
Chapter VI:
The Power of Imprisonment in Prison Life and Reflections (1847).....	172
Chapter VII:
Conclusion.....	196
Bibliography.....	213