For Marissa and my parents

Acknowledgements

Thanks to good friends who've been with me throughout my years as a graduate student: Chris Palmer, Fritz Swanson, Jamie Olson, Cephas Sekhar, Gavin Hollis, Russ McDonald, Joy Wood, Kate Blakinger, Autumn Kinsey, Christian DeLeon, and Josh Lambert. You helped me more than you know.

Thanks to my committee, Matt Lassiter, Julian Levinson, and Sara Blair for their careful guidance of this project.

And special thanks to Patsy Yaeger, who gave me a long leash but knew when to rein it in, and whose high standard consistently challenged me and made this project—and my thinking—better.

Thanks to Gregg Crane for all his support of my wandering path—without which I might not have made it this far.

Thanks to Peter Ho Davies for helping smooth my transition from the PhD to the MFA.

Thanks to Eileen Pollack for helping smooth my transition back to the PhD, and for her help as an early committee member, and for her long, patient guidance since taking me on as creative nonfiction student in 2003.

Thanks to all my teachers at Michigan and Texas.

And thanks to my family—my parents, David Stroud, Susan McNeese, and Larry McNeese, and my sister, Sarah Stroud Quinlan—for all their help over the years and their unwavering belief in me. Thanks too to Mark and Lindy Bass, the most patient and supportive in-laws imaginable.

And above all thanks to my wife Marissa, without whose daily companionship I might not have made it through the last seven years, and who was always willing to sign on for one more Michigan winter.
