To my Family

To Pavlos Vassiliou
for his lifelong devotion to rebetika
and for his generosity to this project
Acknowledgements

This dissertation has benefitted significantly from the assistance of numerous individuals and institutions. I am grateful to my thesis advisor and committee chair Professor Joseph Lam whose patience and intellectual contributions helped me shape this thesis into a work of scholarship that holds true to my visions. I extend my gratitude to my dissertation committee members, Professor Emeritus Judith Becker, Professor Christi-Anne Castro, Professor Vassilios Lambropoulos and Professor Artemis Leontis. Professor Leontis has shown special dedication to this project and even visited Rebetiki Istoria in April, 2009. I thank you for your unwavering interest and for your support. In addition, I would like to thank the professors who inspired my initial research on rebetika as an undergraduate student at Barnard College, Columbia University. Thank you to Professor Ana Maria Ochoa, Professor Timothy Taylor and Professor Karen Van Dyck for encouraging me to pursue my musical and academic study of rebetika.

This dissertation is based on three years of fieldwork in Athens Greece, where I researched and performed rebetika in various capacities. My fieldwork was centered on Rebetiki Istoria, the oldest and best-known rebetadiko in Athens, where I performed violin and bouzouki for three years. I extend my gratitude to the Rebetiki Istoria musicians whose generosity and willingness to share their knowledge and music allowed me a glimpse into their rebetiko knowledge and understanding—Thank you to Vangelis Nikolaidis, Eirini Liokoukoudaki, Nikolaos Menegas and Xaris Xrisinis. Most of all, I am musically and intellectually indebted to Pavlos Vassiliou, the artistic and intellectual spirit behind Rebetiki Istoria and the main inspiration behind this project. I remain in awe of his lifelong dedication to rebetika and of his generous assistance with this project.

Fellowships from numerous institutions enabled my research abroad including the Rackham School of Graduate Studies, the Center for World Performance Studies, the Modern Greek Program, the Center for European Studies and the Musicology Department at the University of Michigan. The Fulbright Foundation enabled an additional year of fieldwork in Athens, as did the University of Michigan Tsangadas Fellowship Fund. Such extensive fieldwork would not have been possible without this financial support. I extend my gratitude to my professors and fellow students of the Ethnomusicology program at the University of Michigan who provided opportunity for much music and conversation along this path of intellectual discovery. Finally, I thank my family whose patience and unwavering support throughout every step of the research and writing process gave me the courage to bring such a project to fruition.

A Note on Transliteration

Transliteration of Greek words follows the guidelines outlined by the Journal for Modern Greek Studies.¹ The English-language literature on rebetika is inconsistent in the transliteration style of the term “rebetika.” In Modern Greek, rebetika is a noun and an adjective and its endings change accordingly. With a few exceptions, in this thesis, I use the term in the following way.

Rebetika: Noun
Rebetika: Plural adjective
Rebetiko: Singular adjective

I make an exception to this rule when transliterating the name of the rebetadiko Ρεμπετική Ιστορία, which I transliterate directly as Rebetiki Istoria.

A Note on Translation

Unless otherwise noted, all translations in this thesis are my own. This includes song texts, poems and quotations.

ABSTRACT

This dissertation is an investigation of the fundamental ideological struggles of Greek modernity through the prism of contemporary rebetiko performance. Drawing from extensive ethnographic research in Athens, Greece, I focus on well-known musician Pavlos Vassiliou and the rebetiko culture he promotes in his music establishment Rebetiki Istoria [Rebetiko History]. Positioning Vassiliou’s rebetiko culture as a type of defensive nationalism, I examine his rebetiko performance as an expression of his desired Greekness. Vassiliou believes that rebetika songs in the early style of the late-nineteenth and early-twentieth century are fundamental to Greek national consciousness. Working to preserve and promote the music in this way, he advocates for an alternative Greekness that resists the perceived negative forces of Europeanization, capitalization and globalization. Vassiliou’s rebetiko performance speaks to the search for a Greek national identity that permeates the political and cultural foundations of the nation. In addition, it vouches for the continued relevance of the national in a world dominated by transnational influences. It suggests that transnational forces like Europeanization and globalization often cause increased significance of the national as defensive protection of conventional national identity paradigms.

This study is structured as a two-fold examination of the socio-cultural implications of Rebetiki Istoria within the context of contemporary Greek modernity. It is culturally and historically grounded in a discussion of Greek modernity that examines national identity constructions, musical and defensive nationalism and the role of Greece in the rapidlyglobalizing world. This is coupled with a close examination of the Rebetiki Istorya music culture, as a network of shared understandings between musicians and audience about Greek music and culture. Special attention is given to musical style as a semantic medium for the ongoing dialogue about Greek national identity. I propose that while resisting negative attributes of Greek modernity, Vassiliou and his music culture are fully embedded in it. This discussion illuminates rarely glimpsed attributes of contemporary rebetiko performance as a live and vital cultural tradition in Greek modernity. In addition, it fills a gap in rebetiko literature which calls for discussion of musical attributes and stylistic factors of rebetika.
