Good afternoon and thank you very much for inviting me to be here today. the truth is I wouldn’t miss it for the world both because I am an admirer of the important work of the Academic Women’s Caucus and because of my unbounded admiration and respect for the leaders you are recognizing today.

The Academic Women’s Caucus belongs to a long line of women’s organizations and less formal groups that stretch back to our founding.

From that time,
women themselves have consistently and persistently been the leaders in the long struggle at the University to achieve equality for women, to recognize women's contributions, and to foster an environment in which women may succeed.

From the time in 1858 when Sarah Burger first applied for admission to the University to the present, women from the University and the community have dedicated untold effort, overcome formidable barriers, and endured considerable hardship and sacrifice to make the University a better, more fair, more intellectually challenging, and a more diverse and enriching place for us all.

Each generation of Michigan women has faced a different set of problems.

Today, I know that while we still have not achieved full equality in hiring, we have added significant numbers of women to the faculty especially at the lower ranks and I think we have in place some mechanisms now to increase the number of hires at a rate that will accelerate in the next few years.

(Let me also note that in response to a recommendation of the President’s Advisory Commission on Women’s Issues Provost Whitaker has authorized three senior level hires of faculty women to begin to address the issue of representation at the rank of Professor.

So while faculty hiring continues to be a pressing concern, of even more concern now is the issue of climate, or retention, and equal opportunity for fulfilling careers and professional advancement. while also meeting the needs of both men and women to sustain the quality of family life and responsibility.

Let me note parenthetically in this connection that at the recommendation of the Women’s Commission that we have made some progress •Tenure clock policy
•Child care referral services •and we will soon have in place a policy for modified duties for women faculty experiencing pregnancy or childbirth.

But I don’t have to tell you that we still have a long way to go before we can say that our community fully welcomes reflects the experiences and talents of women.

The Academic Women’s Caucus is thus a vitally important part of our efforts to bring change and to support women at the University and you are a part of a tradition of women’s leadership that is an integral part of the University’s greatness.

Of course, individual women of courage, dedication and commitment have also provided critical leadership and today.
I am pleased to be a part of awards to three of them--
Janice Jenkins
Jean Krish
and Phyllis Ocker

Until recently, Michigan women have not received the recognition they fully earned but fortunately, and thanks largely to women themselves, that is changing.

Your award is named after Regent Sarah Godard Power a woman whose care and influence will be felt by many generations to come in our University for many contributions to policy and also for many direct and interventions and examples of personal caring and concern for our community and its people.

And how wonderful, how absolutely appropriate, that Regent Nellie Varner should be with us to present these awards named for Regent Power. since she and Regent Varner formed such a dynamic partnership as advocates and leaders.

Regent Varner is someone who has moved mountains to change our University for the better.

As faculty member, Director of Affirmative Action, and Associate Dean of Rackham and now in her second term as a University Regent, Nellie Varner has been a driving force has made a difference not just for women but also for people of color and, indeed, for all of us in making Michigan a more open, diverse and caring place for learning.

For years Regent Power has been found at meetings and conferences, and sending notes and making phone calls offering encouragement, checking up on progress, opening bottlenecks doing whatever needed doing to support changemakers, women, minorities a catalyst for grass roots leadership and, at the same time, pushing and shoving the Board and the Adminsitration in the direction of justice and equity.

We are all in your debt, Nellie, and the impact of your many contributions to the University will be felt as long as there is a University of Michigan.

On behalf of all of us, I thank you.
Now please join me in welcoming Regent Varner who will make the awards.

but one of a long line of women leaders who have pulled, pushed, and sometimes dragged this University along the path to equality for women in life and leadership of the University.
